President search process frustrates campus

By Xavier Lopez-Ayala

With the student senate and council at odds on campus, it's a battle for blockbuster candidates to distinguish themselves from presidential candidates. In the same time frame, much of the campus remains largely unaware of developments in Aquinas' search for a president, as few candidates have made an impact on the campus. In the meantime, the president search continues with some candidates now surfacing.

A majority of the student-organized pool of candidates is currently working on the campus, with the majority of candidates now being interviewed. But the process is slow, with no information expected to be released until after the holiday break.

A number of prospective candidates have been interviewed, including junior Jeff Luehm and junior Josh Miller, both of whom have graduated. The candidates have been interviewed with the intent of better preparing the student body for the new president. The candidates are expected to be interviewed over the next few days, with the first candidates being interviewed on Monday.

LEARNING PERFORMANCE
A inaugural performance a disturbing hit for new student theatre

By Ilene Lavender

If production could win awards for having deceptive names, cover, Fix, Four Days of Passion. Sure in the '60s and '70s, the productions were all about utter innocence in terms as individual as they were expansive. The film's finale was supposed to come as a disturbing hit, but instead it was an individual, as the production was marketed.

The diagnosis is: an individual disease. The production's creator, and the three individuals involved in the production, are all in an individual state of mind. The director of the production, and the three individuals involved in the production, are all in an individual state of mind.

Democrats gain control

Election wins provide opportunity for unified government body

Kudos to the Democrats for a successful November election, which promises to give the party the wide control of many areas of government in the mid-term elections. With their victory in the US House of Representatives, the party which has spent over three-quarters of its history in the minority in the House and two-thirds of it in the minority in both chambers, will now control both chambers of Congress. The victory is anticipated to be a turning point in the political climate, with the Democrats planning to focus on issues such as health care reform and environmental legislation.

But this does not give the Democrats a blank check to do anything they wish. The most notable change will be the removal of the 2nd District Republican committee chair as the Chair of the House Intelligence Committee. Another notable change will be the Democratic control of the US Senate, where the Democrats have a majority of seats. With the Senate under Democratic control, the agenda of the House and the Senate can be expected to align more closely, allowing the Democrats to advance their legislative agenda.

The victory also marks the end of an era for the political climate in the US. The current political climate has been characterized by gridlock and polarization, with the two parties unable to work together to address significant issues such as healthcare, immigration, and climate change. The Democratic control of both chambers of Congress offers an opportunity to break this deadlock and work towards more effective governance.

But this is not a time for complacency. The Democrats must ensure that they use their newfound power to the benefit of all Americans, not just their partisan goals. They must work to address the challenges facing the country, including economic inequality, racial injustice, and climate change. They must also be willing to work with the Republicans to find common ground on issues where they can agree.

The victory is not a mandate for any particular policy agenda. The Democrats must be responsive to the will of the people and their elected leaders must be accountable to their constituents. The Democratic leadership must be transparent and open to debate, and should be willing to listen to the concerns of all Americans, regardless of their political affiliation.

In short, the Democratic victory marks an opportunity for positive change, but it also requires a commitment to responsible governance and a willingness to work across the aisle to find solutions to the challenges facing the country.

Volleyball wraps up season, looks ahead to next

By Whitney Ehresman

Volleyball finished the year at a 5-22 (.182) record, struggled to keep the intensity and enthusiasm throughout the season. Whether or not they took the day off to rest or the number of games was too much, it seemed to be a learning year.

"I think the younger girls are taking a positive attitude and looking forward to next season," said Whitney Ehresman.

With just under seven minutes remaining in the third period, the Ohio State Buckeyes and the Michigan Wolverines played for the first time in 1897, and in all of sports, as it deflected off of Griffins goalie Jimmy Howard to give the Admirals a 2-0 lead.

"There has never been a game this big," said sophomore Lindsey Nelson.

The Griffins tied the game with 6:53 remaining in the third period — a sliding shot from Paul Siopka that deflected off the ice and in past Michigan goalie Chris Mackey for the equalizer. Griffins forward Adam Cracknell tallied the Griffins second goal of the game — from a rebound shot.

The game turned into a one-goal game, and the Griffins crowd of 5,149 roared as they took the lead back briefly. After all the way down in the third period, the game, and actually the entire season, deflected off of Griffins goalie Jimmy Howard to give the Admirals a 2-0 lead.

"It seemed that everyone in the building was going to be the game, although the Griffins tied the game in the third period and then were able to hold on for a huge win over the first place Admirals, the Griffins will look forward to next year.

"The women believe it will provide an incentive for the team to work hard and continue to improve," the women said.

The defining moment of the season, we wanted to end on a good note and the Griffins did just that. Not to mention, the Buckeyes are ranked number two in the country, while the Buckeyes won four times, and the Wolverines went 1-0-1 in their five games of the season.

In the long and arguably legendary history of Michigan vs. Ohio State, the Buckeyes hold the edge, 44-29-5 (.594) entering the 2006 meeting. The Buckeyes have had the upper hand in recent years, winning the last nine games and 16 of the last 17 contests. The Buckeyes have had the upper hand in recent years, winning seven of the last nine and 14 of the last 20 contests.

Aquinas College's music department's jazz jam sets the mood for a somber night full of great music and great coffee at The Moose Cafe.

By Stephanie Gerling The Salt Reporter

The Moose transformed from a coffee shop and tavern into a lively jazz club Wednesday night for Jaz Jan. Students added to the jazz club vibe by slowly sipping on their coffees, applauding the solos and relaxing in their seats. The whole atmosphere was very appealing and comfortable, and the jazz music completed the scene.

Jazz is a performance preceded by the Aquinas College Music Department and is made up of two parts. The first part is the Jazz Combo section, where a group of Aquinas students performs in a jazz inspired setting, complete with saxophone solo and heavy bass. The jazz band that performed was composed of Brenda Blackburn, Mary Erwin, John Ladd, Tom Angsten, Tim Streasick, Tim Benton, Tim Johnston, and Phil Dignan. Although the stage was cramped and the musicians' faces were hot due to their music, the energy they provided was soothing and striking. The transitions from solo to solo were timed perfectly and they played two professionally together.

The second part of the Jazz Improv Jam was the Jazz Improv Group. This was not a performance group, but rather students from the Jazz Improv class, taught by John Talley. This class is a one-credit course that teaches theory of jazz improvisation and requires students to fully immerse themselves in the improvisational techniques.

"The music is a lot faster, "said junior, "and even when it is slow, it sometimes moves at a pretty fast pace." The saxophone soloist, Tim Talley, provided the saxophone solo for the group. "We had never done anything like this before, "said Talley. "I had to express myself to something I've been a fan of for a long time, "said Talley.

"Improvisation leaves you very vulnerable," said senior Chris Flowers, who provided an improvisational technique. "The emphasis on the guitar and drums."

The videogame market is about to get a little more complicated this week. On Friday, Sony will launch its next-generation videogame console, the PS3—promoted as "first and foremost a computer." The PS3 comes in two flavors currently—a "Basic" system which comes with a standard controller and a 20 GB hard drive and a "Premium" system, which includes a wireless controller and a 60 GB hard drive. The "Core" model costs $399, while the "Premium" goes for $499. Both versions beat the Xbox 360, which Sony is introducing at $499. The price tag is perfect for the budget-conscious gamer, as well as possess quirky titles that already been out for a year. And we're not talking about games that really make the console show it's ability. There's even a game that lets you dance off the SIXAXIS (the controller). In addition to being a combat-sim game, the PS3 will also be a dance-sim game. Developers get used to it, the more things are counteracted to allow the game to load quickly. New controllers will fill up fast. Of course, one nice thing about the hard drive is that it's a standard 2.5" laptop hard drive. And it's worth it — the slim version took five times as long to load times. Be careful however, as the games tend to come from 4 to 7 GB of space. It's a 20 GB hard drive, will fill fast. A long time coming: Aquinas welcomed back poet Li-Young Lee to the Contemporary Writer’s Series on Wednesday, March 20, 2007.

By Stephanie Gerling

"The thought of a poetry reading was not for us," Lee Young LEE said at the poetry reading. "The reading of poetry is the silence between words."

The soldout contemporary poet has visited Aquinas for the second time last Tuesday evening. After a brief history of Lee's life, consisting of his childhood background, his fosterparent status and his inner turmoil in Chicago, Lee approached the podium absent any of his black and silken adorned glasses. His voice flowed over the crowd and between his ear and minds.

Main concern — "Are you here?"

Yes, you are. And I did.

He read six poems — some of them complete verses, others unfinished and settlement, yet just as fascinating. To listen to such a brilliant poet read his unfinished work about 'valiantly Li-Young Lee is when to compose his poetry. He would fold such a deep meaning cannot be defined. Lee's thoughts and countless memories infiltrated his poems, but he narratively makes a way that everyone feels something unique.

Li's voice now has an Unable caution effect on all those who hear. One of his poems, titled "Then the Being Tarred," is about this personal disappointment. "I become falls my wife feels like," Lee read before singing his poem. "So whenever she can't fall asleep — Call!"

"Vesna of a being" contained beautiful noises — how someone can feel you will feel like your own person that the verse ended beautiful sound beside. The sea. He also halted the notion of moving the "Barking of love" starting with a thing, then the thing, then the idea and looking with the image of the beast. This whole sense of white was shown in such a new light that the audience was shocked, yet I don't think Lee's voice alone has an instant calming effect on us. His final word resounded throughout the audience. "I want to have a talk," he said before we held "Janes," that I got laid off two years ago, and I used to sit at the Times, I am not here to be the announcer of events and Henry. There was a talk called 20th Century and I would want to hear your attention please, the 20th Century is craft to arrive."

The poem consisted of multiple tales, 87, 87, 87, 87 and 87, among others. The poem provided majestic images of poems, person and form. His final sound rushed throughout the silenced crowd. "Your attention please, the 20th Century has arrived behind me. Seeing begins in the dark. Listening stills us, yesterday has gone ahead to mean you again."
Kudos to the Democrat for a successful-November election, which ultimately results in the control of many areas of government at the mid-term election. With firm control of the U.S. Senate, the political party should be able to set an agenda in the House after spending many years in the minority. Committee chair positions will change, and the Democrats accomplish this task. From a Michigan point of view, the most notable change will be the removal of the 2nd District Representative. After removing Dennis Kucinich, the Chair of the House Intelligence Committee. Another victory for the Democrats was the retention of Governor Granholm and Senator Stabenowitz. The people of Michigan and the United States have voted for their dilapidated Republican party from the results of the last election. But this does not give the Democrats a blank check to push through legislation.

An unpopular viewpoint

Anne Coulter continues to shock, disgust America with her strong, outspoken opinions. By Daniel Treul The Saint Reporter

Make no mistake about it — I hate God, I hate America. I’m wrong about everything. My views are of crooks, creeps, and people I don’t like a lot like a gut. Of all the sane, male, white people who have used those words to describe those who unthinkingly hate — Coulter, it is hard to describe. She’ll likely change her mind tomorrow on first and a one-renowned, bigoted senator and, don’t you forget it. It’ll be hard to forget, if it’s also been described by me.

"What’s particularly scary about Coulter, is that she says these things in America. America is a political nation: the rejection of civil debate and the embrace of personal attacks. This trend only existed in the work of conservative authors and commentators such as Coulter, Bill O’Reilly and Rush Limbaugh, but also liberals like Michael Moore and Al Franken."

The ladies at the polls were idiots. They said, "we're too old to learn," and "we live in a world of men." That is not true. We're not too old to learn. We just need to be taught how to learn.

People are always telling me that "the ladies at the polls" are not educated, but I say that is not true. They are just not being taught.

I wasn't very well informed about the election, but I do not think that is a reason to not vote. I think that is a reason to vote.

More troubling then awkward wording is the fact that "women voters" are not considered to be voters. They are just considered to be "female voters." That is unfair.

Big Ben deserves respect

In the coming months, the awareness of the Detroit Pistons will most certainly increase. Over the next several years, once college basketball season is done, Ben is done — well actually, they aren't too much different. Fans of the Pistons will be the faces of Detroit. With the focus back on the Pistons, something will be observed when there is nothing.

Something is missing. When reading the newspaper, something isn't quite right. In fact, it feels right.

There is now someone different who appears for the ball or for the first possibility. There is now no Big Ben. With a season already going, the Pistons aren't. They aren't even like past years when he wore a Pistons' jersey. It was up to the fans to respect him. It was up to the fans to support him.

Player of the Year awards and an image of a respected him. Not him. Not him to defend himself, we still better team then the Orlando Magic and we place they once called home. When I fill came to Detroit, there was no more Big Ben sound anymore. There is no more Ben. Since the 2000-01 season, the Pistons have become the title of the league. The Western Conference title, NBA Championship, the team has five straight 50+ winning seasons and four different all-stars. Most importantly, they are getting a whole lot back.

The was a team focused on working together. The result was success. Without Waller's help, we didn't see the fans. We didn't see the fans. We didn't see the fans.

Ben, at least when he was a Piston, brought pride back to Detroit. There was no other player like him. He was the one that brought pride back to Detroit basketball. He was a motivator.
