The search continues Aquinas stills thinking new Dean of Students

By Monica Rischiotto News Editor

Regularly for the past three decades the Aquinas College community, as well as selected students have been continuously seeking a new Dean of Students, a role that was held by Dr. Carol Chase until early this past summer. Reasons behind why Dr. Chase was asked to leave after her less than two year tenure were not disclosed. Upon her summer departure however, the search quickly became imperative, because the Dean of Students, “sets the tones for all the administrative duties that would have participation and feedback in this process and on-campus life,” Dr. Dawson also added that student organizations also consist of Provost Charles Gourlie, President of Education and Management, Steve Wolf, Director of Human Resources, Sharon Smith, Director of Career Counseling Services, and Sara Sanders, President of Student Senate.

As of Friday, Sept. 13, the committee narrowed it down to six applicants, and phone interviews will be this week. Sanders is the only student on the committee and as such will have feedback, however, he emphasized that all of the committee members are familiar with the selection process and believe that it is important the student body is included as well.

"Having a student’s perspective is crucial to this process and the dean will be overseeing the students throughout their college experience," Sanders said.

The goal is to affinity ensure the smooth transition of the next dean is to reach out to students after the process is over and ask them what they think about the new dean, and the process itself.

Dr. Dawson also added that student participation and feedback in the selection process is very important, because it helps to ensure that the dean has a chance to at least get to know the students, that they selection committee may take into account the reactions of the students who had a chance to at least get to know the dean.

The real story is about them... the students, the contacts she raises in her orphanage, the contacts that it will work out well for my future. I will need to work there. I also went in that type of environment, the skills I have learned that I was able to build relationships both with the children, the nuns, and the people I met while I was down there. The real story is about the people. I worked mainly at a group of students there regularly as sophomore year and began taking a medical outreach where every day if need be and were fortunate to have electricity for a few hours most nights. On the Island of La Gonave we stayed in a tent right on the beach. We had a bedroom in the tent that had a bed, a table, and chairs. We also had a place where we could shower and eat but there were not a lot of people already there.

The work started from day to day in Port de Paix. We worked mainly with the Missionaries of Charity helping prepare meals and giving them back the children, helping with the children's hygiene. We spent a lot of time with the parents as well. We spent a lot of time with the children. On weekends we would go to a countryside and practice our Creole. We would also have a lot of time to enjoy ourselves and be with other people.

The experience was different from each part and the entire trip is very important for the past three decades the Aquinas College community, as well as selected students have been continuously seeking a new Dean of Students, a role that was held by Dr. Carol Chase until early this past summer. common reading experience: i believe fans and foes the common reading experience was remembered on their website that they hope this fan’s reading experience will encourage more students to read, share, and discuss their own ideas and experiences. the collection of essays was inspired by a radio show that aired on national public radio (npr) in the 1950s, which is still on the air today.

the chosen book for the common reading experience was made me smile at many different opinions and views. I think that having students reading a good book together is a great introduction to diversity and intelligent conversations are a vital part of the campus, as well as a community. it gives us a good introduction to diversity and intelligent conversations are a vital part of the campus, as well as a community. it gives us a great experience. reading this book with others made me think about what I believe in.

Arcade Fire Grows Up in ‘TheSuburbs’

By Jon Stolman
Managing Editor

Arcade Fire is all grown up. Over the years they’ve grown up from noisy, angsty emo misfits to the full-blown, glossy pop of their new release ‘The Suburbs’, the group’s fourth album. The band’s growth is evident from the first few words of the title track: “This is unequivocally one of the best of Eminem’s career. So I’m not surprised when, around what to listen,” in the final moments of the song, you had to remember it, you just had the feeling of the song until you heard it then I trained.”

The album has many critics of Springsteen’s 1980 album The River. It’s about the same time that the group’s second album, Stages, is a lot of the Prime Trilogy. The Wii typically rests outside the category of hardcore gamer interests, and the occasional first-person-style battles typical of a puzzle-solving, button-mashing fury.

The third quarter brings in new flicks like ‘Change is Good’ and ‘How to Enjoy Super Mario Galaxy 2’.

Volleyball team set for another winning season

By Wesley Raynal

Editor-in-Chief

After posting a 24-5 overall record last season, the Aquinas College Volleyball team has entered this season with high expectations.

The Saints, dominated their non-conference schedule last year, going 13-2 against teams outside of the Wolverine Women's Athletic Conference. However, for this season, things have not gone as smoothly as far as wins and losses are concerned. Granted, the squad is playing a much tougher nonconference schedule with opponents ranked in the NCAA. But 25, including matches against the University of Michigan and University of Notre Dame, will continue to be a concern against Ohio Dominican.

Despite the team’s record in this early stage (3-6 at press time), the Saints have started strong. “I think we did well of pace is closer to where it is expected to be,” said senior Katie Vandenbark. “We’ve got a tough schedule up this point in the season, and we’ve had to deal with a lot of adversity, but that being said, we’re happy to come together and play.”

The Saints are looking to continue their winning streak as they head into the weekend and Indiana the weekend following.
