AQB club makes strides for cancer research on campus and in the GR community

By Brian Kalish
The Saint Reporter

The Penney's group will be very busy concluding this semester. Some big events are coming up that will help promote the club and raise awareness for the issues they are fighting for. Penney's, if you aren't familiar with them, is a registered student organization that is dedicated to supporting people living with cancer through partnerships with the Hope Lodges and the American Cancer Society.

The Hope Lodges are places where patients with cancer can go to be free of charge that provide all kinds of services, not only for the patient, but for the caregivers as well said Weinandy. "The lodges are amazing for sure." We have received for this event helps promote the club as well as the college. He spoke about how every year the college and the lodges host a "unique perspective" on whatever the event is that they're here to get help and they're not." Everyone is encouraged to come with this event.

Our event will take place in March 20, anyone at Aquinas can get involved and we're hoping that they'll get involved and make a difference at the President's Office.

Controversy: Humpayan Chien, a spoken word poet, was meant to appear on campus in 2012 but her performance was canceled due to complications arising within the controversial events committee.

Spending break is a time to have fun and escape from the realities of campus life and exams. While most of you were probably trying to make up for those sleepless nights of studying or partied all morning long in Mero, some individuals devoted their time off to giving back to communities. Whether it was to volunteer for a cause or helping out others?

"It was hard to accept the reality of what I was seeing," said McRoberts.

It is the first time Relay for Life walk will be running is on April 12 and it is the first time Relay for Life walk will be running on campus. "I am super excited to start this event for the first time at Aquinas," said Penney's President Marion McRoberts. The fee for individuals, according to Penney's, is $10 and as Penney's says, "group participation is highly encouraged; it means more when you join a group that is reaching the same goal."

There is a Relay for Life Aquinas page that can bring awareness in regard to how to get started if you are interested, as well as information on the process of putting on the event. You can visit the site www.aquinas.edu/servicelearning/trips. For those cases, the Controversial Events Committee is a "de facto bias" against their events. Giving back, it's doing hopes that her idea will help resolve this issue, and make the events more accessible to students. Her ultimate goal is to simply make the policy easier to work with and "more conducive to student planning" for any groups involved.

Gun tickets for concerts?

Hip-hop mogul offers Beyoncé tickets for those looking to turn in guns

By Laura Farrell

News Editor

At first glance firearms and Beef do not mix. Hip-hop mogul Michael "Bhive" Williams, has found a way to put the two together. Williams, president of Family Entertainment and management to Cee-Lo Green and Outkast, is attempting a unique collaboration. Williams plans to trade Beyoncé, a female firefighter in New York City.

"I am appropriately calling my initiative "Guns for Greatness" and he is looking for tickets for people's firearms in New York City.

Williams has not gotten any results yet. Many states have instated gun buyback programs recently. Mayor of Los Angeles, Antonio Villaraigosa, has set aside 25 million dollars for those who turn in guns. Michigan, offers different prices for guns depending on the type of gun. Many states have installed buyback programs as a way to get guns off the streets.

In Chicago, thousands of dead guns were turned in last year in a two-week buyback for the people of the state. Thousands of guns were turned in for a total of 47,000 dollars.

"It is unusual," said Marko. "However, it is time to start thinking about this," said Williams. "I am very sure that he, at a certain age, couldn't physically do the job."
Campus Safety
Aquinas campus safety proves that security is reliable

Campus Safety has been working all year round to uphold their commitment to Aquinas; to keep students everywhere safe. Open 24/7, Campus Safety provides students and faculty with a variety of services. These services include the valued newest service: replacement of ID cards, technical vehicle assistance, car battery jump starts. The staff at Campus Safety all work together to create a safe and helpful environment for students.

“I think they’re very helpful,” said Aquinas freshman Claire Gill. “It’s a helpful and safe environment for students.

Safety First: The campus safety building sits behind the Academic Building and is open 24/7.

In recent months, a spike in incidents occurred, kickstarting Campus Safety into overtime. “My job is to keep the campus safe,” said Kristina Amsley, a twenty-year-old Aquinas junior who recently joined the team, recently hiring Melissa Clark, a nineteen-year-old Aquinas freshman.

The entire staff, led by Campus Safety Director Kevin Kwiatkowski, are certified in CPR and standard first aid.

Anheuser-Busch sued

Powerhouse beer manufacturer Anheuser-Busch is being sued by its customers for allegedly watering down their products. Those lawsuits were filed late February in the states of Pennsylvania, California and New Jersey by consumers believing that Anheuser-Busch has been discoloring its products, leading to the conclusion that the company is causing the alcohol content to lower, the plaintiffs claim.

The plaintiffs claim to be aware of this knowledge due to the intel of former employees of the company’s United States beer market, producing an approximate 10 billion gallons of malt beverages a year. The company manufacturer is accused of watering down a number of products, including Budweiser, Red Stag, Red Light, Blue Light, and Miller Lite.

According to the complaints, the defendants are responsible equipment that measures alcohol content, and when the company allows water to be added into its final stage before bottling, it cuts the alcohol content 3 to 5%.

Each lawsuit, if won, would cost Anheuser-Busch over $10 million in damages. Along with the cost of damages, the plaintiffs seek court order to enjoin the company’s advertising of the alcohol content. Lawsuits are also developing in the states of Ohio and Colorado.

Titanic II: The story of a second chance

Titanic II to make a splash over 100 years after its predecessor

Set to sail again: Billionaire Clive Palmer is set to recreate the original Titanic, this time a passenger in the voyage. By Allena Muller

At a news conference last week in New York, Clive Palmer, an Australian billionaire, revealed blueprints for his newest project, building the Titanic II, as a exact replica of the former Titanic.

In 1914, the Titanic II is set to sail across the Atlantic following the same path as the late Titanic. The objective on the water will be similarly strike the same number of lives.

Palmer is in no doubt taking on a daunting venture in recreating the ship that sank in 1912 on its voyage from Southampton to New York. What is certain is that if he is confident in its abilities. At the news conference, Palmer said, “We will sail into New York on the ship they designed.”

The head designer, Markku Kanerva, believes that the ship will be built with all possibilities features. He said, “We are aware that we know the safety point of view. It will be absolutely the most safe cruise ship in the world when it leaves.”

Palmer also called the public by stating that the ship has more than enough lifeboats and evacuation equipment for everyone aboard the ship in case of emergency. He will not admit how much the project as a whole will cost. Palmer stressed that this project is a tribute to those who built the first Titanic. Palmer has already received 40,000 applications from individuals wanting to be part of the voyage. Successful ships are offered up to a million dollars for first showings. Even Palmer himself will be a passenger in the voyage.

Who are we, you ask?
We’re Aquinas College Bookstore and we provide everything students need to get more college for their money. From college gear and school supplies to food and beverages and everything in between, we’re the complete college outfitter.

OH! We almost forgot—thanks to our Best Price Promise*, we always get the best prices. In fact, if you find a lower textbook price locally or online, we’ll beat it by 10%. No questions asked.

*For the lowest textbook price, we may be able to beat our competitor’s price on identical products.

Aaron Swartz was a developer that helped build several websites, such as Reddit, that are still around today. He was also a passionate activist, who was campaigning for publically-funded articles to be made available to the public and for private helps to articles to be made more easily acces able. Knowledge is something that should be free for all to use. It makes no sense that only those who can afford a college education can learn.

College research papers can be difficult. Whether they are scientific, historical, or anything in between they require hours of work looking up sources, finding sources that are actually available, interpreting vast sources, and then finally writing the paper. This, of course, is assuming that the paper that you want to ref erence is actually available. There are tools like inter-library loan that can help with that sometimes, but not al ways.

If someone doesn’t attend a class, it is inappropriate to access those three kinds of articles or journals, however; it would be much more dif

icult. Lost fees for each and every article would be required, sometimes even for pieces that are funded by the public and that the public should be able to read (at least in theory). Public knowl edge is severely limited, even when it is paid for by the government.

Swartz took steps to alleviate this problem by publishing articles from JSTOR (Journal Storage, online database) and distributing them freely online. He faced a federal trial that became too much for him. He committed suicide on January 11 of this year.

I think that Swartz will become a hero to all of us that have wanted to make knowledge freely available to every one, especially researchers funded by tax dollars.

As I have written before, the internet is too powerful to be held by the government and corporations in many cases. Information should be as free as open and up on the digital space as it is in the public sphere. SCPA, PIPA, and CSOP all failed. Hopefully this is not the next step in the direction toward a more open and free system of information for everyone.

We have all seen the commercials that are ubiquitous in politi cal ads before an election. They tout “clean” and “safe” natural gas. They show smiling engineers in front of green fields. We are told that hundreds of thousands of jobs will be created and increased tax revenue. They are surrounded by american flags and eagle symbols with statements in them so they are all lies.

Fossil fuel facts are not the same as our future and they are the remnants of our past. We are in a time of crisis, and it is time for fossil fuels to go the way of the dinosaurs. Fracking is one of the newest ways to ob tain fossil fuels. EPA sparked a few weeks, sparked by leaks. It was then when it released a draft report suggesting that hydraulic fracturing or fracking to extract natural gas had serious public health issues in or near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The EPA was clear in stating that “fracking is not clean” and “safe” and it needs to be explained by practitioners of hydraulic fracturing. It was used as a solvent agent in the production of the gas in the oil, and it needs to be migrated upward, suggesting that the cause of contamination came from the gas production zone itself.

Three Kent County environmental groups are sponsoring a com munity forum on Monday, March 25, to discuss fracking of oil and gas within Kent County and the surrounding area.

Spring break is over and some of us are heading into the last eight weeks of our undergraduate careers, which bring a wide range of emotions and life deadlines at Aquinas College.

The questions started the first day of the new year, or ever, but they are increasing now that May is closer than what we think.

These questions come from everything (obviously). College can be an open time for the ideas, views and concerns of the Aquinas community.

Feeling like a Morgen dorff figure... well I am. I’m not a citizen about a good but fast- tracked medial. I love politics, probably because I feel like all of the time and constantly find myself missing Davis. You remember Maria Morgen dorff, right? The socially inept, unfash ionable teenager who reported all that is ignored and becomes a national sensation. Self missing day’s television screens is at an anticipation — is quality enter tainment — is quality enter tainment — is quality enter tainment — is quality enter tainment. Unfortunately, if you don’t know who I am talking about, you probably weren’t one of us either.

Just kidding. You are totally cool. “Sorry, have you got a co oky, Forgive me”

I know what I am saying is that although the plethora of nonsense broadcasting on TV is at an all-time high, there is no hope for TV after all.

Somewhere in between the an xiety for quality enter tainment and philosophy, television and cinema talent currently exists. I am sure it just doesn’t last too much anymore and occasionally a tiny smile creeps into my face.

Lauren Ramey has been playing for Aquinas since her freshman year. Lauren began playing in kindergarten. "Growing up" Ramey admitted, "I had not really had an opportunity to play since intramurals in the fall. This game was so different from any game I have played before. In addition, I had not brought tennis shoes with me so I did show up to our game wearing Converse, not very suitable shoes for a game of soccer. I kicked in and I was determined to perform to the best of my abilities." Lauren Ramey has been playing in the soccer goal since her kindergarten. "It was amazing to experience it in a completely new and unexpected way," she said.
